The section, it will be remembered, renders the "householder" (defined as the actual tenant or immediate landlord of the whole of a building or tenement) liable for fines imposed on residents in the house, for violation of certain Ordinances. in case such fines shall not have been recovered from the actual offenders. The Ordinances for violation of which these fines may be recovered from the householder are 11 of 1844, 14 of 1844, 12 of 1857, and 7 of 1858. The first relates to publicans' licences, the second is the Gambling Ordinance, the third is repealed by 10 of 1867, which (relating to contagious diseases) is placed in the same category, and the last is incorporated with 11 of 1844. All the penalties imposed under all importance brought by her is one to the effect appearance of a person who represented that at 6.30 the Captain's cousin cause on board, but these Ordinances may, therefore, be recovered from the householder, who if he be not the actual tenant must be the immediate landlord, and may be a European or a Chinaman indifferently so long as any part of the house is rented by Chinese. No doubt the idea of the Legislature in passing this section was to impose such liability on the landlord as would compel him to seture respectable tenants, but the real effect of the provision is only to compel him to have tenants who do not violate three particular laws, and the last few hours being of the most exeruciating to the satisfaction of the Court, and judgment | the deck twice. The dogs were not fastened question is whether the security from the violation of those laws is a sufficient quid pro compared with such torture. quo, whether the offences are such as to justify the immense liability cast by this section on a person whose culpability may amount to nothing greater than a mistaken confidence in certain men, his tenants. Now if this section were found to be equally serviceable with reference to all the Ordinances above mentioned, it might be said that the advantage to the public afforded b, the liability imposed under it would be so great as pensary testified to his having come on Sa to justify its harshness. But as a matter of fact no case has yet come before the public 15 drops of laudanum and camphor. He did in which the section has been applied with reference to Ordinances 11 of 1814 or 10 of 1867. It is true that under the last mentioned Ordinance the Registrar-General imposes the fines, and for aught we know he, may have mulcted hundreds of householders in large penalties in the obscurity to which an extraordinary law commits a no less extraordinary Court. But if such cases have occurred they have not been before the public and we can know nothing of them. So far as the outside world is concerned, the application of this section to the Ordinances 11 of 1844 and 10 of 1867 has always been a dead being Henry, Favonius, and Hannah. letter, and for what appears to be a very good reason, namely, that in nine out of ten of the cases under those Ordinances the offender is himself the householder, and is liable without the application of this section. But the licences being abolished. the irregular houses are no langer under the necessity of paying tribute to their once favoured rivals, and probably, arguing from analogy, have begun to resist the requisitions of the brotherhood of informers also. Wha then could be more natural than that these latter, tenacious of their waning influence and dollars, should arrange a pitched battle strike a decisive blow, and so lay under the old contribution all the wavering rebels who were inclined to resent it? This would account and many people will think satisfactorily, for the sudden appearance of a number of illegal gamblers in the Police Court. THE CAT FOR THE RUFFIANS. Mr. Straight has abtained leave from the House of Commons to introduce a Bill which will make whipping a regular part of the sentences to be passed upon all those ruffians who kick and belabour their wretched wives. The insulters and assaulters of women and young girls are also likely to find themselves remembered in this very desirable measure, which will, moreover, contain clauses for the especial behoof of such as maltreat children of both sexes. The reason why it is sought to attach the penalty of flogging to cruelty of the base and cowardly character in question; may be found in the infamy which now appertains to the lash. By abolishing its use in the Army and Navy, except for certain gross or repeated cases of atrocious violence and brutality, we time, $6271. Henceforward, this weapon is the brand which justice employs for those who deserve to be treated like fierce and dangerous brutes—among whom it is certainly proper to rank the wifebeater, the insulter and assaulter of women and girls, and such as seriously maltrest little children. No doubt the extension of flogging, even to these monstrous crimes, must be entefully guarded; for they are right who say that the punishment of the lash, beside being acutely humiliating, if a most terrible one Amputation does not produce an anguish equal to that of the lach applied in good earnest. THE LAW OF EXTRADITION.

(News of the World.) The appearance of Margnerite Dixblanc at Bow-street has relieved the public mind from a salutary fear as to the practice of the Liaw of Extradition. We can easily understand the rendition of a British subject who has made his escape to France, or of a Frenchman who has found refuge here, but it seem ed to offer a new form of complication that a Belgian subject charged with the commission of a crime in England should Hongkong Distillery Company-Par, nominal, escape to France. The French and the Belgian Governments have each acted with the necessary vigilance, and by the parmission of the Be! gian Government the prisoner has been surrendered by the French police. The means of travelling which now so abundantly exist put it in the power of any criminal to escape from our soil to that of a power with which we have no treaty of extradition, and it can easily be conceived that such an occurrence may prove a very serious embarrassment to justice. Some years ago a merchant escaped from a town to the north, and took refuge in one of the United States, where the law did not recognise the crime he had committed here in the same sense, and an Hinglish officer with a warrant found that he had made a useless journey into a State so far uncivilised as not to know the crime of fraudulent bankruptcy. The international law, which we all profess to hold in regard, might be usefully employed in defining the crimes common to all civilised countries, and the municipal law of each could be altered in accordance with the sense of the civilised world. It would shock the public mind to know that there was a corner of civilisation where a murderer could be protected, but it is only less essential to draw a cordon around all criminals than around murderers. Society has but one interest, to protect itself and to secure criminals accused a fair trial, and this can always be accomplished in England at least—one if not two trials, and reason ble bail for the accused.

" The Pope he leaded Happy Life." Father Nathaniel was the head Pope or priest on our property. He was distinguished from his many brethern by being a gentleman, from having received a liberal education (he could read Latin and Greek), but principally from his having in his younger days spent his leisure hours in giving instruction to the youth of his village. Almost all the young people in the village who possessed any education were indebted for their advantages to Father Nathaniel This alone made the man my friend, but even he was, not free from the clerical vice of · drinking, and owed his death to the inordinate consumption of vodka. He died suffering greatly. The vodka got into his limbs, and beginning with his feet mounted up until the body became no saturated with the spirit, that it was as if on fire. His only relief was sitting in cold water, the depth being increased as the spirit mounted; at last it reached his heart, and the Father died in his bath. Father Peter was of a different sort: he was a jolly, rollicking, ignorant, stupid fellow, fond of a game of cards, but having an out-of-the-way cure of souls, he had not many opportunities of enjoying his favourite amusement. But when the "Stangvoi" came on his rounds, or the local . Tchinovnik was in the village, then high jinks were going on in the Pope's house. One Saturday morning such a party commenced their game of " preference," and went merrily on until the bell began to summon the villagers to their vespers. But the Father was deaf, and did not hear the summons. Father Feter,_Father Peter! come church; the people are all waiting for you to begin the service," exclaimed the sacristan, rushing into the room. "All right, Ivan, I'm coming," answered the Pope, and laying down his cards with a request to his friends to stay the game until he returned, he went to church and performed the service, at the close of which he went back, helped himself to a glass of vodka, and with an exclamation, "That has made me dry !" swallowed the spirit, sat down again to his cards and dis-The party played all night, for the Harbours, safe for scores of vessels, are also Tchinovnik had done a good stroke of opened by the same means; and some islands business in the neighbourhood, and was in funds; so that the Popo had not such a fine number a dozen, when the unprotected shores chance every day. The hour for the Sunday morning service had arrived, and the sacristan had again to 'call his superior, who reluctantly obeyed the call. Two hours after this the play recommenced, and continued until the early dawn on Monday morning. The Rope must have his amusements, but nothing was allowed to interfere with the punctual performance of the services. Father Peter had very odd notions of the words "meum" and "tuum." I once gave him an order to receive some wood out of our forests. This order served him on several occasions, until, discovering the trick, I made him return it. Wood, however, he must have, so he helped himself, carrying on a regular business in stealing first, and then selling what did not belong to him. I do not believe a Pope ought to smoke, and I never saw one doing so we were accustomed to have, the reserve would Feejee Archipelago. But will the people like it when they understand it? The people are already aware that a better order of things once existed. In 1745, the John Brown's Scheme to Get Rid of Slavery farm labourer bought his barley at 2s. 3d per bushel, turned it into malt, paid no tax, —(the cottagers were not then taxed)—and to Massachusetts, where he lived from 1846 made excellent ale for his own use at ½d. per to 1849. This is quenching thirst, but, when exclusively used, requires a full diet, and, when that cannot be obtained, there is the desire for some more potent stimulant. Hence the Chinese find the necessity for opium; and English, Scotch, and Irish labourers who drink tea and are too poor to buy sufficient food, resort to gin and whisky. The love of strong. drinks is not natural to the English, but is created by the English law. William III. and Queen Anne taxed malt, and made the beer too dear for the people, and encouraged the extraction of spirits from barley for the sake of revenue. In the reign of George I and II., gin drinking became a prevailing vice. In 1703, the dear and fiery wines of Portugal were admitted at a third less duty than the light cheap wines of France. Thus, the British Legislature created artificially the taste for strong drinks. This has gone down from father to son, from generation to generation, and has produced more moral guilt, more destruction to human life than all the battles fought by England since the Conquest. Gin drinking has been sanction. ed and encouraged in this country for the sake of revenue, just as gambling has been encouraged at Homburg, Baden, and other towns on the Continent, to the everlasting disgrace of the British Legislature. It is well known that those who drink beer with their dinner require, and ought to take, less solid food. A Good Word for Coral Reefs. All coral-bound coasts, and especially those of islands in mid ocean, derive great benefit from their recis. The wide coral banks and the enclosed channels greatly enlarge the limits tributary to the lands they encircle. Besides being barriers against the ocean, they are dikes to detain the detritus of the bills They stop the waters of the streams, and cause it to drop the silt they were bearing off. and thus secure its addition to the land. They prevent, therefore, the waste which is constantly going on about islands without such barriers; for the ocean not only en--croaches upon the unprotected shores of small islands, but carries off much of whatever the streams empty into it. The delta of Rewa, on Viti Lebu, resulting from the detritus accumulations of a large river, covers nearly sixty square miles. This is an extreme case in the Pacific, as few islands are so large, and consequently rivers of such magnitude are not common. But there is rarely a coral girt island has not at least some narrow plains from this source; and upon them the villages of the natives are usually situated. Around Tahiti these plains are from half mile to two or three miles in width, and the cocoa-nut and bread fruit groves are mostly confined to them. The reefs also provide extensive fishing grounds for the natives, and afford abundant fish, their main reliance in the way of animal food. They also large supply interior waters for practice in navigation and for safe communication between distant settlements. And the effect is evident in the spirit of maritime enterprise which characterises the islanders for these circumstances have favoured the construction of large sail-cances in which they venture beyond their own land, and often undertake voyages hundreds of miles in length. Communication between the Friend-Islanders and the Feeiees has long been kept up by means of these large rudely- NORTH-GERMAN FIRE INSUEANCE rigged sail-cances. Jukes remarks that the sea within the great Australian barrier is "one great natual barbour;" and this harbour is as long as from the extremity of Florida to Newfoundland: Coral reefs are sometimes viewed as only traps to surprise and wreck the unwary mariner; but whoever has visited the dreary prison-house, St. Helena, will have some appreciation of the benefits derived from the growing zoophytes. But in addition to these general benefits, there are also contributions from the larger reof regions to the commerce of the world. Besides pearls, there is the biche de mer (called also beche de mer, sea ginseng, and in China, tri pang), thousands of hundred-weight of which annually enter the Chinese market from the reef-regions of the East Indies, Australia, and the seas to the north, including the for Chinese dishes, either stews or soups. animals, called often sea slugs, and also sea state.
